SUMMER MANAGEMENT

OF THE POULTRY FLOCK

(F. W. Kasmir, A. & M. College of Texas.)

It is important in summer poultry management that the houses be kept cool and airy. Poultry of all ages suffer during the summer. Make the house had roosting place cool by opening shutters and windows, providing muslin curtains or wooden shutters over open front, hinged at the top to swing out; and so fastened as to keep out rain and sunshine yet admit plenty of fresh air. If possible locate the house in the shade of a tree. Poultry can stand less heat than humans, hence the importance of providing shade and a cool roosting place. Keep the house clean and regularly disinfected even though it requires extra work. On many farms, hens stop laying in summer, largely because of lack of fresh and pure drinking water. An abundant supply of cool, clean water is essential. Remember an egg is about two-thirds water.

Keep up the warfare against lice, mites and bluebugs. Gather the eggs three times a day and market them just as frequently per week. Keep in a cool place.

Do not tolerate broody hens.

When dry weather and hot sun has dried up most of the grasses, make some other provision for green food in the form of vegetables. Some times it is advisable to sow oats, wheat or rye. Select those individuals, that on account of age, constitution, or other undesirable feature, you plan well on a fattening ration, as follows: they stop laying, confine them in a small, clean, cool pen. Feed them with on a fattening ration, as follows: 3 pounds milo, kafir or corn meal, 1 pound wheat middlings (shorts), 1 pound ground oats with hulls removed, and 3 pounds butter milk or sour milk. If milk is not available add 5 per cent of beef scraps to the ration and moisten with water. MILK in various forms is desirable in the fattening of poultry. Feed the mixture twice daily, all they will clean up, but no more. Supplement this with charcoal, fresh water, and sufficient green food. The first few days feed sparingly, but toward the end of the second week they will eat up clean, but no more. It seldom pays to fatten poultry for a longer period than two weeks.

Never sell poultry until well fattened. If it does not pay to fatten poultry it surely does not pay to grow it in the first place. Well fattened poultry not only weighs more but brings more per pound.

Do not sell poultry at so much per dozen. This is a loose way of doing business, seldom satisfactory to the producer, although frequently profitable to the middleman. In marketing broilers the above may prove an exception. Market all your poultry at so much per pound, remembering that it pays to study your markets. If your local dealer does not give satisfactory prices, coop them up comfortably and ship to some reliable commission merchant or produce company in the larger cities.

Do not feed your flock for force molt, because this has been found unsatisfactory. Much better practice is to allow your hens to lay when they wish and feed them well at all times. During the molting season they should be fed exceptionally well on nutritious foods. The growing of a new coat of feathers is a hard problem for the hen unless she receives good treatment and feeding. The growing feathers requires a large amount of oily and rich in protein feeds. It is advisable to add a little cotton seed meal to their ration and more beef scrap and sunflower seed.

BLUE RIBBON TOMATOES.

Again the blue ribbon changes hands on tomatoes and this time it goes to Mr. R. M. Nall of Rose Hill farm. The editor is under obligations to him for a nice lot of the finest we ever saw grown in Barzoo county.

Primitive Aids to Sight.

Simple yet effective aids to sight were used long before any form of lens had been devised. Spectacles first became known about the beginning of the fourteenth century, and an inscription on the tomb of a nobleman of Florence, Salvino Armatu, who died in 1317, states that he was the inventor.

The earliest form of an instrument to aid the sight was a shield for the eyes, a very small opening admitting the light. Empress Nero was shortsighted and employed what contemporary writers called a "mirror," which in reality was an emerald reduced to a plane surface.

In his "Voyage to Hudson's Bay" he tells how the Eskimos, in order to prevent snow blindness, covered their eyes with pieces of wood or ivory properly shaped and having in them a narrow slit the length of the eye, through which they looked out. Not only did this device prevent the terrible snow blindness, but with its aid objects could be seen at a surprising distance, and the natives used them in the manner of telescopes even when there was no danger of snow blindness.—New York Tribune.

To Lord Charles Diersell Diersell appeared to be a rather mysterious personage. Speaking of that much discussed statesman in his memoirs, he says:

"We stayed at Sandringham and went for long walks together, during which Diersell talked and laughed with the greatest enjoyment. But I remember how in the pauses of the conversation he would stand still and, glass in eye, dreamily surveying the landscape, would make some such observation as 'The air is balmy' and 'and service' or 'The foliage is stunted, but not productive' with the most weighty and measured emphasis, as though these were prophetic utterances. I was quite bewildered, for I did not then know whether he were serious or were indulging a recondite wit. He was a visionary, dwelling much in a world of his own, and I know now that he was perfectly natural and serious on these occasions."

Kankombwa Warriors.

The most interesting tribe of Togo land, in West Africa, is the Kankombwa, whose country lies between that of the Tchokossi and the Tchadjo, but a little more to the west. Although they are still only in the bow and arrow stage of martial evolution, they are exceedingly brave and warlike. A Kankombwa warrior in full war dress is probably as picturesque a sight as is to be seen anywhere in Africa. On his head he wears a helmet, elaborately decorated with cowrie shells and surmounted with a pair of graceful horns of the roan antelope. The quiver in which he carries his poisoned arrows is of rhinoceros hide, also ornamented with cowrie shells. Except for his loin cloth he is quite nude, but his jet black skin shines like satin, and round his arms, from wrist to shoulder in some cases, are many bangles of brass and copper alternating.—Windsor Magazine.

Japan's Good Roads.

Japan is peculiarly well off in respect of good highways. The Tokaido, which runs from Kyoto to Tokyo, is over 300 miles in length, and, as the writer can testify, is admirably constructed. There is also the Nakasendo, which is even longer and passes through some of the finest scenery in the world. The reason of Japan's excellence in the matter of roads is that in the old days—not so very long ago—the daimios, or territorial nobles, had to journey to Tokyo once a year in order to pay their respects to the sovereign. They traveled by road, with great retinues, and if the highways were not in perfect condition feudal justice was meted out to the delinquents.—London Chronicle.

Saltiest Lake in the World.

This is Lake Urmia, in Persia, situated more than 4,000 feet above the level of the sea. It contains 22 per cent of salt as against 85 per cent in the Dead sea. The lake is eighty-four miles long and twenty-four miles broad, and its northern coasts are incrustated with a border of salt glittering white in the sun. No living thing can survive in it except a species of very small jellyfish.

Deafness and Rumbling.

Specialists have discovered that any one who is partially deaf can hear best when riding in a train. The rumbling of the heavy wheels on the track causes the drum of the ear to vibrate and in this way excites the capacity to hear.—Exchange.

Corrected.

Mother—Percy, I told you you could not go playing in the vacant lot, and I now observe that you have. Percy—My dear mother, you used the wrong verb. You should have told me that I "must" not go there, not that I "could" not.

The Raven.

The ancients credited the raven with unusual longevity, but modern investigation shows that it is not warranted. The bird rarely lives more than seven years.

Our Natural Bridges.

There are ten bridges formed by nature in the United States. Their formation is caused by the current of streams running through rocks.

She Knew.

Sunday School Teacher—Can you tell me who dwelt in the Garden of Eden? Little May—Yes, ma'am; the Adamases.—Exchange.

Shaved Foreheads and Ear Sticks.

The Wakhury people of East Africa are known as the Kikuyu and Akikuyu and inhabit the Kikuyu hills, one of the most beautiful, fertile and economically important parts of the British East Africa protectorate, not far from Nairobi. These people have rich farms, a great variety of food to eat and are a very finely built race. The good looks of the women, however, are often spoiled by their curious custom of shaving their foreheads in order to make room for the headstaps to which they attach their loads. These people have many curious customs. They are very frightened of the spirits of the dead, for instance, and when any one of them falls ill and is at all likely to die the poor sufferer is at once put out and left to the mercy of the hyenas, entirely deserted by the rest of the tribe. The unmarried women wear sticks through their ears as a sort of badge, while the married ones sport bunches of bangles.—Wide World Magazine.

Dresden's Model Theater Stage.

Dresden seems to have theatrically solved the problem of long waits, for the Koenigliches Schauspielhaus brings the technical side of the theater up to the highest point that has ever been reached. The three principal features are simplicity, rapidity of working and the liberal allowance for space, air and light. Instead of having the conventional stage where one scene must be taken down before the next can be set or of having a revolving stage the Schauspielhaus is provided with a stage which is lowered hydraulically for the purpose of shifting the scenery. While one scene is being used, the second is all set up below on the left hand side. The stage is then lowered, and the first scene is rolled off to the right by electric motors, the new scene at the same time being rolled on. Then the stage is again raised, and the play goes on with an interruption of but thirty seconds.—Exchange.

Height of the Panama Canal.

The middle section of the Panama canal, thirty-four miles long, has a water level of eighty-five feet higher than the two end sections, which are sea levels. Vessels entering the canal from the ocean on either side are lifted to the middle section, a height of eighty-five feet, by three sets of locks, each of which raises the vessel a fraction over twenty-eight feet, making a total of eighty-five feet. These locks are constructed side by side like a double track railway, so that one ship may be going up while the other is going down. Only one ship can be in a lock at the same time, but as the locks are constructed in pairs, side by side, two ships going in opposite directions, one going up the incline and the other going down, may pass each other with in halting distance. Vessels are towed through the locks by electric machinery.—Philadelphia Press.

A Domestic Disturbance.

The trouble began with a tea fight. The milk was sour, the cake cut up, and the sugar fell out with the tongs. The spoons clashed, and the table groaned. The fringes on the dollies snarled, and the crackers snapped. The easy chairs were soon up in arms, and even the clocks did not agree. Things were no better in the kitchen. The pitchers were all set by the ears and stuck out their lips, while the teapot and kettle poked their noses into everything. The range was redhot, which made the saucepan look black and finally boil over. The bells started jangling, all the pickles and preserves in the cupboard were jarred, and there were any number of scraps in the refrigerator and meat safe. Naturally when the mistress of the house reached the scene of disorder the cook was put out.—Judge.

It Changed His Mind.

A switching engine prevented a Chicago man from committing suicide the other day. With a rope around his neck and fastened to the rails of the Rock Island railroad he was crawling between the ties, prepared to jump from a viaduct, when a switching engine came along and cut the rope. As he had lost his chance of hanging himself, he thought better of his project.

Good Advice.

"What would you say," said the prophet of woe, "if I were to tell you that in a very short space of time all the rivers in this country would dry up?"

"I would say," replied the patient man, "go and do thou likewise."—Stray Stories.

Confusing.

Tommy Figgam—Paw, doesn't "reverse" mean to "back"? Paw Figgam—Well, yes, it does. Tommy Figgam—Then, what did Uncle Bill mean when he said that he busted up in business because he had too many reverses and not enough backing?—Chicago Post.

A Facial Contortionist.

Mrs. Wunder—Washington was a versatile man. Mr. Wunder—He had to be to look like all his pictures.—Baltimore American.

Just the Trouble.

Knicker—All men are equal before the law. Bocker—That's just the trouble; they should be equal after the law.—Judge.
